Shropshire Days Out

NORTH

If fabulous, ever-changing English scenery is your thing, North Shropshire is the place for you.

The region will quickly restore your appetite for all things local and independent.

The market towns will also tick the boxes of those who love browsing independent shops full of unexpected surprises,

Small, luxury hotels, fantastically friendly bed and breakfasts, superb self-catering homes, pub accommodation and high-standard camping and caravanning sites also have you covered when it comes to accommodation.

Shropshire

EAST

It is no idle boast to say the modern world owes its existence to East Shropshire, with Ironbridge Gorge and Telford playing important roles in shaping life as we know it today.

Tradition and modernity rub shoulders every day in this glorious part of the world and the mix of old and new is reflected in the food and the great country pubs, inviting locals or brilliant bars.

You can also enjoy a trip to Telford Shopping Centre or check out some of the friendly, local shops in the market towns.

Days Out

The county town of Shropshire remains its beating heart; a treasure trove of delights crammed into a myriad of streets and passageways, all tucked inside a natural loop in the River Severn.

Shrewsbury has started to punch its weight on the national food scene after a huge boom in interest in the last 20 years.

It is also one of the few towns left in the country where the number of independent shops outnumber the big national chains – and in Shrewsbury's case it's by a significant margin.

WEST

SOUTH

Think of rolling hills, rugged peaks, sweeping valleys, tumbling streams and a patchwork of green and golden fields in a pastoral lowland. You've just thought of south Shropshire.

Ludlow may well be the loveliest town in England – and it's also one of the best fed. In addition to its restaurants, the town is also a haven of high-quality delis, bakeries, butchers, gourmet producers and greengrocers.

The region's market towns take a huge pride in bringing customers the best local produce, with customer service that means shoppers return time after time.
